The start of a new year always fills me with inspiration to learn something new. Luckily, the programs at LACMA this season will give us plenty of opportunities to do just that!

I’m especially excited to get hands-on in the kitchen and learn about Persian culinary traditions at our Cooking with LACMA workshop in conjunction with Dining with the Sultan: The Fine Art of Feasting in February, and to celebrate the companion exhibition Dining with the Sultan at Charles White Elementary School at its opening reception, also in February, complete with hands-on art-making for all ages.

We also have an exciting and diverse calendar of talks with experts and artists on topics ranging from working with stone to Korean art. I’m looking forward to speaking in one of this season’s talks, Aging Creatively: Community Initiatives in Los Angeles, exploring countywide programs that connect older adults through arts, culture, and wellness. This talk is just one of several programs from our Creative Aging initiative this season—we’re also hosting films, workshops, meetups, and professional development for teaching artists designed to combat ageism.

Of course, I can’t talk about learning new skills without highlighting our robust range of art classes. Whether you want to try block printing, mending, assemblage, or even poetry, there’s an art class to help you hone your craft this winter. I can’t wait to learn with you all at LACMA!

Warmly,
Naima J. Keith

YOUTH ART ACTIVITY:
DO YOU EVER WONDER...

Before there were art museums, people would display their treasures in collector’s cabinets. Paintings, books, shells, gems, and even sea creatures are among the objects shown in The World Made Wondrous: The Dutch Collector’s Cabinet and the Politics of Possession.

Take your time to walk through this fantastic collection, and don’t miss a tiny extraordinary object. It’s an oval-shaped miniature painted portrait, shown at LACMA for the first time. Housed in its own miniature leather box, it almost looks like a locket.

The portrait is of a young woman. She has shoulder-length curly hair and is wearing a red dress, a necklace, and a hair ornament. But you won’t see all that.

In the museum, the portrait is displayed with an overlay on top of it, giving the girl a black hat, black outfit, haircut, and mustache.

Just like it sounds, an overlay is something transparent that, in this case, is placed over the portrait. Displayed underneath the portrait are several more overlays painted to show different outfits.

OKAY, LET’S GET TO THE ART!
Imagine yourself in a painting.

Draw the shape of your head. Add your hair. Now look for your eyebrows and nose and draw those in. Next draw your mouth, then your eyes. You can add your favorite top or shirt and jewelry if you want. If you have colors, add those to your self-portrait.

Next, find something transparent to use for your overlay. You can recycle a plastic lid from a food container or maybe you have plastic film or tracing paper at home.

Image Credit: Miniature Portrait with Overlays, Holland, c. 1650, Costume Council Curatorial Discretionary Fund
Markers work best on plastic. Cut your plastic piece so it is a similar size to your portrait. Lay the plastic on top of your portrait and go to town! Do you ever wonder what you would look like as something else? Change your hair and outfit, add a crown, do everything!

See yourself as a character in a book, in a new place, or with a different hairstyle. You are only limited by your imagination! Make a few overlays so you can see yourself in different situations. Show all your friends. This is a game you could play for hours. Have fun!

As we wrap up this season, our fall programming was jam-packed with exciting activities for all! Here are some highlights from the last three months:

TEEN INTERNSHIP CONNECTING COMMUNITIES THROUGH ART + TECH

LACMA’s Teen Internship program provides under-served youth ages 16–18 with opportunities to expand and develop skills in art-making through multidisciplinary project-based approaches and techniques inspired by works in LACMA’s collection.

CELEBRATING LACMA × SNAPCHAT: MONUMENTAL PERSPECTIVES IN COMMUNITY

This past season, we were delighted to offer hands-on art making activities complementing the initiative LACMA × Snapchat: Monumental Perspectives. We co-presented a hand casting workshop with artist Glenn Kaino at the Japanese American National Museum and hosted piñata-making workshops at Lincoln Park Recreation Center with Rubén Ortiz Torres.
INTO THE COSMOS: EDWIN HUBBLE AND THE BIRTH OF MODERN ASTRONOMY

Last October, astronomers, poets, and art historians shared reflections about the continued imagining of celestial events and humanity’s place in the universe. The program also presented a glimpse of the upcoming exhibition Mapping the Infinite: Cosmologies Across Cultures, opening fall 2024.

FIBER MAKER’S CIRCLE

Fiber Maker’s Circle on Sundays has been a creative success. Creators of all ages have come together to learn to embroider, weave, knit, crochet, and make pom-poms. Bring a friend or family members and join us!
